Mindful Teaching Tips

Social-emotional learning is for adults, too. The Moshi app offers soothing music and sounds that you can play to be kind to your own mind during a few free minutes. Like we teach our students, the most important friendship is the one you have with YOU. Remember the lessons you've been teaching, and take some time for self-care.

Teaching Transcript

Before You Listen

Flumpy is a Moshling who loves to make friends. He knows how to be a good friend, and today he will show us how.

Flumpy loves spending time with his friends.

What do you like to do with your friends? Tell someone nearby what you like to do.

Let your body be still. This is what Flumpy does when he wants to be calm and listen. Let's listen to his story.

After You Listen

How can we get along with our friends like Flumpy does?

(Make a list of ways to be a good friend, guiding students to these answers, in addition to their own:)

You can be a good friend by listening, talking, and sharing.

Flumpy makes friends by:

Listening

Talking

Sharing

Now, we will practice being a good friend to others.

Find a Family Member Activity

During our mindfulness and social-emotional learning time, we worked on finding friends and having conversations. Students found friends, then talked and listened to each other. You can have a similar experience at home. Complete the Find a Family Member Activity to make connections and work on communication skills. This activity is designed for an open space, including outside, and can be completed at a safe social distance.

Find a Family Member...and talk about your favorite foods.

Find a Family Member...and talk about one of your favorite places.

Find a Family Member...and talk about something you love to do.

Find a Family Member...and tell each other a funny joke.

Find a Family Member...(make up your own topic to talk about together.
